You are required to create an academic poster for a health promotion campaign focused on a specific health issue and target group. Your poster must include a planned intervention, supported by evidence, theory, and appropriate communication strategies. To achieve higher marks, you should also submit a 15-minute audio explaining your poster.

Assignment instructions:

For this task, you must produce:

- An academic poster created in PowerPoint, presenting a health promotion campaign.
The poster should fit on a single A3 slide.
- Your poster must be based on a specific health issue and aimed at a clear target group (e.g. young adults, pregnant women, ethnic minority communities)
- You must also submit a 15-minute audio narration explaining your poster and the thinking behind your campaign. This is not mandatory to pass; however, you cannot achieve higher mark bands without the audio.
- The word limit for the poster content is 1,000 words (excluding references).

You can choose from a range of health topics for your campaign. Some examples include obesity, smoking, substance misuse, skin cancer, bowel cancer, breastfeeding, cervical cancer, sexual health, or monkeypox. These are just examples, and you may choose any appropriate topic.

You will be assessed on:

- Your explanation of the origins of health promotion and why it matters in public health today.
- How you have applied health promotion theories and approaches in your campaign.
- Your ability to plan a specific, evidence-based intervention that is creative and practical.
- Your use of clear communication strategies suitable for your chosen audience.
- Your ability to present your work in a professional and structured format, using accurate Arden Harvard referencing.

Your submission should include:

- A PowerPoint file with your completed A3 poster
- A separate slide with your reference list (not included on the poster slide itself)
- Optional audio narration embedded in the PowerPoint file can help you achieve higher marks.
- A title page with your student number, module name, submission date, and exact word count

Do not include your name, as Arden University uses anonymous marking. You must include your STU number.

Learning Outcomes (LO)

By completing this assignment, you will demonstrate all five learning outcomes for this module:

LO1: Identify and explain the origins of health promotion

LO2: Appraise the key theories and concepts that inform health promotion and relate these to specific health promotion approaches and methods.

LO3: Plan health promotion programmes in light of specific examples showing an evidence-based approach, creativity, and innovation.

LO4: Identify a variety of communication strategies to disseminate health promotion messages.

LO5: Graduate attribute: Professional Skills - Perform effectively within the professional environment. Work within a team, demonstrating interpersonal skills such as effective listening, persuasion and presentation. Be flexible and adaptable to changes within the professional environment.

You will be graded based on how well you meet these learning outcomes. Your marker will use a rubric to grade your work, and you can click here to access the marking rubric for this assignment.
